ETHICS IN RECOVERY

Description

Over a three-month period, this group met weekly for ninety minutes to work on core material in ethical and moral treatment and to use their group process as an agent for recovery. The group is structured as a cognitive-behavior and social learning program. The group members studied material in five critical areas: (1) critical thinking, (2) social contracting, (3) stages of problem-solving techniques (4) understanding value clarifications and (5) Learning development and personal cultivation. Each member was required to relate this material to his personal circumstances and experiences. Successful completion required evidence that the member had consistently engaged in self-examination, study and share in group discussion.
